INTRODUCTION

This directory of resources in the Mid-Atlantic states seeks to provide teachers and students with information and assistance in the area of Asian Studies. In addition, it is a unique resource for leaders responsible for the advancement of understanding between American communities and the peoples of Asia, and a valuable guide for business leaders who need sources of specialized knowledge about the nations of Asia. In general, the final selection of data within the directory has been made on the basis of their relevance for people interested in:

(1) background information concerning the peoples and nations of Asia,
(2) teaching aids,
(3) enrichment experiences (i.e., visits to museums, performing arts, travel to Asia),
(4) guidance information for secondary school students interested in pursuing Asian studies in colleges and universities,
(5) opportunities for continuing education for teachers (i.e., special courses, summer study in Asia, seminars, colloquia, and advanced university study).

Information within this volume is organized under six major categories: organizations; curriculum development and services; colleges, universities, and academic associations; libraries and information services; museums, galleries and places to visit; and bookstores and book publishers. The name index provides quick access to the organizations, institutions and publications in the directory.

The style is concise. Each entry tries to provide the name, address, and telephone number of the organization or service; the name and title of each executive officer; a brief description of the service or program; and the titles of newsletters, bulletins or journals published by the organization. Lists of general books and publications are not included since they may be found in bibliographies and more comprehensive directories.

Each section of the directory begins with an entry form that indicates the order in which the information is listed along with paragraph numbers. The omission of a number in the text signifies the unavailability or insignificance of that particular item of information.

The Mid-Atlantic Region (MAR) includes Delaware, the District of Columbia, Maryland, New Jersey, New York (south of Poughkeepsie), and Pennsylvania. Because the MAR is a compact geographical area, where state boundaries have little relevance to the availability of resources or services, information within this directory is organized by subject categories rather than along geographical lines. The nature of the region--with its heavy concentration of colleges and universities, headquarters for book publishers, national headquarters for religious organizations, important business corporations, and national government agencies--provides a wealth of data unparalleled in any other single part of the United States.

The present directory culminates the work begun in the autumn of 1978 by the MAR/AAS Committee on Academic Resources. During the past eighteen months its members have established the goals for its work; surveyed the various sources of information and their value to potential users; compiled the data; prepared the entries; completed the many details of writing, editing, and preparing for publication; written the copy for news releases and order forms; and set up the schedule and procedures for promotion and sale. In their work together the committee members have discovered that the directory is much more than a collection of cold data. It is a living organism, always growing, every part related to other parts, a reflection of a vital global community of Asians and Americans seeking to know and appreciate each other.

The first edition of any directory inevitably omits information which should have been included, partly because the compilers were not aware of its existence and partly because the costs of publication limit the size of the book. The congruence of the magnitude of the resources and the widespread lack of knowledge about them validate the need for this committee's work.

Current members of the committee are:

Archie R. Crouch, Editor
Independent Researcher in Chinese Studies, Englewood, NJ

Frank Joseph Shulman, Assistant Editor
University of Maryland-College Park Campus

The committee appreciates the assistance of others who have contributed to its work. These include the members of the 1973 MAR/AAS Committee on Academic Programs and Resources, chaired by Clarence Maloney of Seton Hall University, which produced two papers related to the present work. (The first, by Richard Gard, was entitled "Tentative List of Non-Academic Facilities and Resources for Asian Studies in the Greater New York-Northern New Jersey Area." The second dealt with Asian language offerings in the Mid-Atlantic Region.) The committee also appreciates the support of three past and current presidents of the Mid-Atlantic Region of the Association for Asian Studies: Sidney L. Greenblatt of Drew University, Mohammad I. Khan of Clarion State College, and E-tu Zen Sun of Pennsylvania State University. Finally, we are especially grateful for the assistance of colleagues who have helped through the critical stages of production: Ellen Crouch, who spent many days assembling the material, proof reading, and preparing the index; Susan Wile, who on occasion worked all night to complete the typing on time; and Carolyn Bialik, Rose Anton-Godwin, and Henry Jones, who prepared the illustrations and graphics.

Most organizations print brochures and leaflets which describe their structure and program, and annual reports which summarize their achievements. These materials are usually provided free upon request. Many organizations also produce newsletters, bulletins, and journals at regular intervals. The title and frequency of such publications are included in each entry whenever such information is available. Organizations also publish books, monographs, and reports--available at a price. Write for catalogs.

There are many Asian performing arts groups in the Mid-Atlantic Region. The more permanent organizations are listed in this section of the directory. Others may be located through Asian studies programs such as The Asian Cultural Exchange Foundation of Towson State University, or the South Asia Regional Studies Center of the University of Pennsylvania. These and other such centers are described in Section III, Colleges and Universities. The most prolific contacts for performing arts groups are local Asian American ethnic organizations. Many are listed in local telephone directories.

(212) 751-3210

Phillips Talbot, Dir.

1. Program services are offered through 17 Country Councils, the Education Department, the Meetings and Studies Department, the Performing Arts Department, the Asia House Gallery, and the Corporate Services Department.

   Country Councils include Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, the People's Republic of China, the Himalayas, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kampuchea (Cambodia)/Laos, Malaysia/Singapore, Pakistan, the Philippines, South Korea, Sri Lanka, Thailand, and Vietnam. They arrange film and lecture programs related to their respective countries in subjects such as Asian arts, anthropology, archaeology, and social customs. They organize seminars and briefings to provide information on current business, economic, and social trends in Asia.

   The Education Department serves as a national center for stimulating and strengthening instruction about Asia in American schools. See II. 1, Resource Centers, p.64 for a full description.

   The Meetings and Studies Department provides lectures, panel discussions, seminars, and conferences through which outstanding Asian and Western scholars, businessmen, politicians, economists, and others meet with American audiences across the U.S.

   The Performing Arts Department introduces to American audiences Asia's most distinguished musicians, dancers, puppeteers, and actors. The Department also publishes monographs on Asian performing arts, and produces films, educational television specials, video cassettes, and records.

   The Asia House Gallery mounts several exhibitions annually, displaying works of art from outstanding public and private collections around the world. The Gallery also publishes catalogs of Asian art in conjunction with its exhibits. The Gallery shares its art with major museums in the U.S.

   The Corporate Services Department arranges briefings and conferences for American businessmen and Asian specialists in government and economics.

2. The library contains approximately 2,000 volumes with a card index. Available to members only. Call before visit to ascertain if library will be in use for other purposes.

3. Publishes Asia (bimonthly), art catalogs, monographs, guides, and educational aids. Write for lists and prices.

4. Membership open to those who pay dues. There are three classifications of members. Regular: persons under 30, $15; full time faculty or staff of nonprofit organizations, $25; persons living outside a 50-mile radius of New York City, $25; persons living within a 50-mile radius of New York City, $50. Sustaining: Contributing, $100; Supporting, $250; Sponsor, $500; patron, $1,000 or more. Corporate: annual minimum, $1,000.

   Each member receives one membership card that admits two persons to all membership programs and activities. Regular members receive invitations to previews of Asia Society exhibitions; subscription to Asia, the Society's bimonthly magazine; invitations to receptions for speakers and performers; admission (two persons to each card) to lectures, film screenings, and panel discussions; reduced admission to concerts, performances, recitals, seminars, and other paid events; discounts on all Society publications; opportunities to participate in special tours of Asian countries; and monthly calendar of events.

Asian Americans make up a significant part of the population in the Mid-Atlantic Region of the Association for Asian Studies. There is a heavy concentration of Southeast and South Asians in Pennsylvania, with 50,000 in Philadelphia alone. All of Asia is represented in the New York metropolitan area and in eastern New Jersey, especially East Asia. There are, for example, 3,000 Chinese restaurants in New York City. The Washington, DC area has the fourth largest concentration of Indochinese refugees in the U.S., after California, Texas and Pennsylvania; a growing Chinese population, and over 30,000 Koreans and Korean Americans.

Most of the major Asian ethnic groups have social, educational, and religious organizations to assist them to adjust to American life and to make their own contribution to American society. In respect to Asian studies, all Asian ethnic groups agree that (1) one pathway to the understanding of the nations and peoples of Asia is to understand the Asians in American communities, and (2) the Asian Americans are a valuable resource for the development of that understanding.

This section of the directory is a brief introduction to the Asian American ethnic organizations in the Mid-Atlantic Region. For a comprehensive listing see Encyclopedic Directory of Ethnic Organizations in the United States. By Lubomyr R. Wynar, Lois Buttlar and Anna T. Wynar. Littleton, Colo.: Libraries Unlimited, 1975. xxiii, 414p. It lists 75 Asian American ethnic organizations within the Mid-Atlantic Region: Chinese-19, Indian-18, Bangladesh-1, Indonesian-2, Filipino-11, Japanese-11, Korean-9, Thai-2, and Vietnamese-2.

Check your local telephone directory for contacts with Asian ethnic groups in your community. A list of East Asian ethnic organizations and social/recreational clubs in the Washington, DC area is included in Appendix IV of the Scholars' Guide to Washington D.C. for East Asian Studies (1979) by Hong N. Kim, published by the Smithsonian Institution Press. For the Philadelphia area see: Directory of Ethnic Resources of Philadelphia and Delaware County by Jaipaul, published by the Ethnic Heritage Affairs Institute, Philadelphia, PA (1979).

CHINESE CULTURAL AND COMMUNITY CENTER
Chinatown YMCA Building
125 North 10th St.
Philadelphia, PA 19107
(215) 923-6767 T. T. Chang, Dir.

1. Located in Philadelphia's Chinatown, the Center offers cultural and social service programs to the Chinese community, tourists, students, and non-Chinese residents of the Delaware Valley. Its building was renovated in 1971 and its striking facade, designed by a notable Chinese architect, is in authentic Mandarin Palace-style.

   Houses many fascinating exhibits, some imported, others from international expositions; and the interior decor incorporates the Chinese motif throughout. Most interesting are the nine-foot high statue of Confucius, the Yin-Yang Wheel of Fortune, the Dragons, the Chinese typewriter, musical instruments, opera exhibits, festival displays, and the exhibits and slides of contemporary arts and crafts. Guided tours through the Center (by reservation except in the summer) include demonstrations of various aspects of Chinese culture. Noontime visitors to the Center can also try the Center's Tea House for a luncheon of Chinese dumplings, pastry, hors d'oeuvres, and tea. Within one block's walking distance there are numerous Chinese restaurants, gift shops, grocery stores, and a Chinese theater.

   Throughout the year, informal classes are offered in Chinese cooking, language, history, calligraphy, Tai Chi-chuan, art, and music. The Center also sponsors Chinese films, festivals, banquets, performances, and events relating to Chinese culture.

Asian embassies, missions to the United Nations, and consulates are sources of informational materials; often including maps, audio-visual items, and occasionally posters. Such services are usually provided by the Office of Cultural Affairs. The larger consulates generally have very active information services and large libraries, some of which maintain large stocks of audio-visuals for loan to the public.

The national day for each country (like the Fourth of July for the United States) is an important celebration for the people of those nations. It is an unusual opportunity for an educational classroom event. The date of each country's national day is listed opposite the name of that country.

Many commercial organizations encourage and facilitate trade between the United States and the nations of Asia. Most of their activity is technical and professional, but some attention is usually given to the development of a good image of the nations and their products and services. The publications of commercial organizations, particularly those which describe their purposes, and the newsletters and magazines which report on their work, provide teachers and students with a range of information about the nations of Asia which is difficult to sort out from general books.

Most tourist agencies and international airlines have attractive pamphlets for public use. Their guide books (available at a price) are packed with facts. A few of the airlines may have travel films and filmstrips for loan to schools and community organizations. Inquire. Phone numbers and addresses are listed in the yellow pages of telephone directories in all the large cities. For example: Japan Airlines, Air India, Northwest Orient Airlines, Pan Am, Trans World Airlines (TWA), etc.

Religious organizations have extensive resources for the study and understanding of the nations and the people of Asia. Staff officers provide suggestions for local programs and study materials, and they help arrange contacts with Asian religious leaders in the United States for presentations in classrooms, community groups, and churches. They also arrange for American teachers, doctors, nurses, and persons engaged in church and community development in Asian nations to speak in classrooms and to other community groups in the U.S. Many of the religious organizations have facilities for setting up "pen pal" relationships between American youth groups and matching groups in Asia.

Religious organizations also produce a large volume of study materials and audio-visuals for grades K-12, the emphasis often determined by the nations of Asia to which they are related. In addition, many churches cooperate through Friendship Press to produce similar materials. (See Section VI. B Publishers, p.134).

The entries included here are for national headquarters only. Most religious organizations also have regional or district offices which stock their current educationsl materials, especially audio-visuals, and arrange for speakers. Access to such offices may be found in your local telephone directory.

Cities and large communities also have ethnic religious organizations which may be contacted by telephone. A list of such groups related to East Asians in the Washington, D.C. area is included in Appendix III of the Scholars' Guide to Washington, D.C. for East Asian Studies (1979) by Hong N. Kim, published by the Smithsonian Institution Press.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION PRESS BOOKS

Scholars' Guide to Washington, D.C. for East Asian Studies
By Hong N. Kim. 1979. xiv, 413p.

The third of several fundamental research aids by the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, this Guide makes the general scholarly resources on China, Japan, Korea and Mongolia in the nation's capital more accessible to interested laymen and East Asia specialists.

Part I surveys the holdings of Washington-area research collections (libraries; archives; art, film, music and map collections; and data banks). Part II discusses the pertinent activities of Washington-based organizations (U.S. government agencies, East Asian embassies, international organizations, private, professional and cultural associations, cultural exchange organizations, and research centers and academic programs of major local universities). The Guide concludes with a number of useful appendixes and indexes. Separate appendixes cover the East Asian Press, East Asian ethnic media, churches and religious organizations, housing, transportation and other facilities, and bookstores. Indexes include a name index, a subject index, an index to personal paper collections, and a library subject-strength index.

Some persons may wish to search more widely and more systematically for information on Asia. They may wish to sample the 3,000 Chinese restaurants in the New York metropolitan area, or enjoy all the Indian dancers in Pennsylvania, or read the private diaries of a Ming Emperor, or search for tidbits of knowledge in the depths of the National Archives in Washington, DC. The few entries in this section could guide such an inquisitive scholar for a lifetime.

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH--ASIAN STUDIES PROGRAM
University Center for International Studies
Forbes Quadrangle
Pittsburgh, PA 15260
(412) 624-5566

Fred Clothey, Acting Dir.
(until August, 1980)
Ed Anthony, Dir.

1. The Outreach Program serves other institutions in western Pennsylvania and the adjacent areas of Ohio and West Virginia through a core of specialists on Asia. With expertise ranging from the humanities and social sciences to international relations, law, and commerce, they provide counsel for curriculum development, leadership for conferences and symposia, and briefings for individuals and corporations interested in Asia. The program directs persons and institutions to local resources such as members of the Asian American community who are skilled in classical Indian dance, Asian cuisine, and Asian art forms.

   Study abroad in Japan, Taiwan, India, and Southeast Asia is encouraged and facilitated through programs coordinated at the university. The program sponsors Asian cultural events for the academic community and the general public.

   Asian Studies has organized courses on China and India through the Pitt's Informal Program on campus, and plans to organize more courses in the future. This program is a continuing education one, directed at the local community. A number of in-service workshops, some entailing in-service credit for the teachers, have been run by the Asian Studies Program over the years, including one on society and culture in China and Japan in 1978 and one on India in 1980. Pitt faculty and graduate students are often asked to come to classrooms in local schools and nearby colleges to speak about their specialties and present slide shows or films. The Program also has sponsored film series on Asian films.

   The Program organized and managed the Tri-State (Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia) "Modern China Seminar" for two and a half years. Members were college faculty and graduate students in the region. Research papers were presented and discussed.

Conducts Brown Bag Lunch talks on "Contemporary China" through the Contemporary China Group. Sponsors talks by Pitt Asian Studies faculty and visiting scholars through the Asian Council Luncheons, and the China, Japan, South and Southeast Asia Subgroups.

The Department of East Asian Languages and Literature also conducts a coordinated program.

3. The Asian Studies Program plans to begin publication of a newsletter in 1980.

4. The program maintains an extensive collection of audio-visual materials for loan.
